BACK FROM PHOENIX.

E. A. Tovrea, head of the firm of E. A. Tovrea Company, returned yesterday morning from Phoenix where he went several days ago to buy beef. According to the Bisbee man the Salt River valley is in the midst of its harvest of the cantaloupe crop which is larger than ever before. Tovrea purchased a fine lot of beef which will be sent to Bisbee for slaughter and disposal to the military now camped on the Arizona border.

PROVO GUARD OUT.

At the request of Chief of Police Allison, Col. Noble has detailed a provo guard to take care of the soldiers who might be in a fair way to disturb the peace of Bisbee. Several on Tuesday night, showed some signs of "speed" and with a military guard the local police officers feel that there will be little or no trouble. The guard consists of a commissioned officer and six enlisted men.

MORE SPEEDERS.

More speeders and violators of the muffler ordinance were in police court yesterday. Each was assessed and contributed to the enlargement of the city's coffers. Several drunks were examined and found guilty and paid. The rain of the previous night, however, had dampened the spirits of all but the soldiers who had the bad lands more or less to themselves.

MENINGITIS REAPPEARS.

Another case of spinal meningitis appeared in the city of Bisbee yesterday in the taking down of Alonzo Garcia, eleven year old step-son of former Mexican Consul J. L. Perez. The boy was taken ill yesterday morning, and was reported in critical condition by two local physicians last night.

While this is the second case to appear in the district since the epidemic two months ago, no fears are felt by the local health authorities but that the cases can be kept isolated.

JACK FRAZIES IN.

Jack Frazier, formerly manager of the Lowell and Central theatres and known throughout Southern Arizona as one of the liveliest wires in his line who ever visited the section, appeared in the Warren District yesterday. He is now representing the Mutual Star Productions and has signed up the Orpheum theatre for the service to begin the latter part of this month. Jack has lost no weight since his departure for California and is the same old congenial good fellow. Mrs. Frazier and Jack, Jr., are now living in Los Angeles. Frazier leaves today for Douglas and may return to his old "stamping grounds" tonight.

DRY SLEEPING WILL BE PORTION FOR THE WARREN REGULARS

Sleeping in pyramidal tents the men of the Twenty-second Infantry, last night spent the first dry darkness in several days. With the information that the regiment of militiamen from the District of Columbia could not be expected in the Warren District for at least two weeks Col. Nobles asked for more equipment and yesterday afternoon the wagon train arrived with the more comfortable tents and other provisions for the comfort of the men.

The water from the sides of the hills practically poured through the tents of the regulars. The habitat of a regular soldier, especially when equipment "A" is only at hand, consists of what is called a "pup" or "dog" tent. A soldier has a happy faculty for giving most any object or action a slangy but highly expressive word. That "pup" or "dog" tent is a good description of the shelter goes without saying. The men don't like the tents and are not averse to telling about it.

"We'll sleep dry tonight, Old Pard," is what one of the men was heard to declare yesterday when the wagon train drove in sight over the Douglas road.

Not only is the new equipment welcome to the men but also to the officers. They have been using the equipment "A". "Dog" tents were their portion and the shipment of yesterday included more commodious quarters, a mail tent and a club tent. The camp, however, is not changed by the new equipment unless it may be the picket lines which may be moved across the tracks.

The District of Columbia militiamen are, and have been, better situated than the regulars. They have their complete equipment with them. In spite of this, however, the Arizona rain from the side of Black mountain, gave the Washington soldiers an introduction to what an Arizona arroyo can be in flood time.

The rain has provided the militiamen, as well as the regulars, with a breathing spell, before work starts. Captain Terry, of the Signal Corps company, desired to get to work yesterday morning but found it impracticable, owing to the weather. As soon as it clears up, to any extent, the routine of the camp will be prosecuted and work will go straight ahead.

New Assignments.

The following tentative assignment of officers of the Thirty-fifth Infantry to organizations and staff appointments has been announced at temporary headquarters, Camp Harry K. Jones, in Douglas.

Adjutant—Captain H. L. Walthall.
Supply officer—Captain F. B. Kobes.

Company K—Captain Manfred Lauza, First Lieutenant Alfred S. Balsam.

Company L—Captain Owen S. Albright.

Company M—Captain Jesse W. Boyd, First Lieutenant James A. McGrath.

Arizona Regiment Leaves.

Douglas is to lose the First Infantry, Arizona national guards, which mobilized a couple of months ago. The second battalion, under command of Maj. Cockendall, broke camp yesterday afternoon preparatory to leaving for Ft. Huachuca, where it will be stationed in the future.

The first battalion and headquarters, under command of Col. A. M. Tuthill, will leave Friday for Naco for duty there. The third battalion left Douglas several weeks ago for Nogales but has since left there, the men being stationed at Casas Grandes, the Roosevelt dam and Ajo.

A CORNER IN COTTON AT THE ROYAL TODAY

"A Corner in Cotton," featuring Miss Marguerite Snow, will be on the boards at the Royal today. Its human interest and its admirably told story will make it one of the most attractive of the Main street theatre in many weeks. The synopsis of the picture follows:

Peggy Ainslee, the daughter of a wealthy broker, tired of the empty life of society, and determines to take up charitable work in the poor quarters of New York City. She confers with Charles Hathaway, a settlement worker, who conducts her on several tours among the needy. Peggy is engaged to marry Algie Sherwood, a social idler. Isabelle Rawlston is also in love with Sherwood and determines to break up his match with Peggy. Isabelle intimates to Sherwood that Peggy's interest in Hathaway is one other than charity. He becomes peevish and tells Peggy she must give up her settlement work. She refuses and returns the engagement ring.

Peggy receives from her father, for her birthday gift, stock in Consolidated Cotton, valued at $50,000. This she puts away, intending to use it in her charities. The next day her father tells her that he has just learned of the deplorable financial conditions among the owners of cotton mills in the south, and that he has written to Colonel Robert Carter, one of the big cotton growers, and offered to aid him.

Colonel Carter, who is proud and haughty, becomes indignant when he receives the letter from the Wall Street broker, and turns down his proffer of assistance. This puzzles Peggy, and she decides to go south and investigate conditions. Arriving in the south, she obtains a position as a mill hand. Her singular beauty attracts the attention of the foreman in the Carter mill, and he tells Peggy she must remain after work, as he wishes to see her. He attempts to force his attentions upon her, but is interrupted by John Carter, the son of the owner. John rescues Peggy, and the foreman is discharged. The gallantry of young Carter appears to Peggy, and a mutual interest springs up between them.

The boll weevil is discovered in the cotton, and this, together with a shortage in the crop, threatens ruin for Colonel Carter. For the second time he refuses financial aid from Peggy's father, and the broker decides to crush him by cornering the cotton market. Peggy learns of her father's manipulations and hurries to New York. With her $50,000 worth of stock as a nucleus she begins a fight on the exchange, in which she is triumphant over her father. He is dumfounded when he learns the identity of his antagonist. Peggy explains the hardships he would have worked among the mill hands had he been successful. She induces him to take a trip south with her, when they meet the Carters. The two men profit through the meeting and come to a complete understanding on economic questions and conditions. Young Carter learns that Peggy was the one who "broke" the corner and saved him and his father from ruin, but speedily forgets his surprise and gratitude in his admiration for his fair savior, and the couple soon decide that there are more important things than cotton in the world.

ARMY SANITATION TO BE STUDIED ON BORDER.

(By Review Leased Wire.)

NEW YORK, July 12.—Dr. Thomas Darlington, former public health commissioner of New York, will leave tomorrow for the Mexican border to study the health of the regular and national guard soldiers on duty there. Dr. Darlington, who has credentials from Secretary of War Baker, is consulting sanitarian of the soldiers' welfare department of the National Civic Federation.

The object of the committee as announced by the executive council of the federation is to observe the advance in sanitation since 1915 in the care of soldiers. Reports will be made to the war department.
